week's engagement last evening with semething of a novelty—a comic opera that is tuneful, a company with splendid solists, a good chorus, beautiful scenery, attrateive costumes, and, finally, no vaudeville "stunts."

"The Two Roses" is new to Salt Lake. It's theme is conventional enough, with a plot that revolves around two love affairs, an exceedingly modest young man, a girl who wins him by disguising herself as a barmaid, and the usual incidental characters. The score is tuneful, light and includes a series of very pretty airs. airs, some of which deserve the popupleasing, pure soprano, with good range, and some exceedingly sweet notes; her stage manner is vivacious and attractive. and she does her part with effective art. Of her solos, "What May a Love Sick Maiden Do" and "Just Three Words," wor repeated recalls.

Bertha Shalek, as Susan, the rustic maid, was charming, and her voice was, if one dare say it, quite as good as Miss Day's. Her acting was in good taste, intelligent and duly subordinated quirements of a minor part. M durements of a minor part. Mr. Haydn the tenor, is an artist, and is blessed with an exceptionally rich, full voice, under perfect control and much better than one is accustomed to hear in light opera. His acting was clever and his appearances were greeted always with applause. Mr. Leslie, the comedian, was acceptable though not excruciatingly funny. Mr. Stewart, Mr. Raiston, Mr. Williams and Mr. Gordon were all adequate. Miss Lyon, as Lady Jane, a friend of Rose Guminings, H. Christopherson, James F. Green, J. A. DeValley, Richard B. The changes are not her specialty, however, for the work of the real actress is evidenced in the ease with which she changes, not alone her make-up and changes, not alone her make-up and lethes, but her part. Portraying six different characters within the few minutes of the whole act, she does each one in a master way, showing hers it as clever and quick at adapting herself as any situation on the boards would require. And withal, it is evident that she is a strong emotional actress of a high class. Charles Sharp, the monologue artist, was easily second on the bill, with his clever jokes and his mixture of music and mirth. But perhaps the most unique thing of all But perhaps the most unique thing of all was "Ferry in Fairland," which is really new in the line of contortionists. Some good work has been done in this line before, and this year some especially interesting features have been shown in the contortion line, but "Ferry" beats them all. Lillian Ashley was rather good in her child stories, but her singing is better omitted; while the other musical numbers by the Oliviera Trio are not out of the ordinary at all. A bunch of three clever tumblers do some fun making in "Fun in a Hotel," and the kinodrome, with a good set of pictures, goes on strike and runs out of focus. The show is well worth seeing. "The Girl and the Bandit," the latest
